

St. John's Hospice in London benefits from folding wall flexibility

A fully glazed bi-folding wall solution was specified to ensure there was complete privacy when concurrent meetings are in progress.

It was a key requirement that the folding walls were independent of each other so that staff at the Hospice could open up one meeting room, whilst leaving the second one closed off.

To allow maximum flexibility, the two glazed folding walls and a solid folding wall (down the centre) could open to create one large space and Style designed an operable three-way meeting post that allowed all systems to open and close independently, but also allowed the post to be stacked when required.

The bifold solution naturally provides a full height pass door to match the look and feel of the other doors within the room, and to match the finish of the fixed partitions in anodised architectural bronze.

Michael Porter, Style's group sales director said, "The final solution gives a great deal of flexibility, and the high-end acoustic ratings mean meetings can take place without sound interference."
